Plastic pollution

Plastic is everywhere. Useful and convenient, it's also a massive pollution problem, especially in our oceans. Turtles and seabirds become ensnared in discarded plastics, and tiny microplastics are eaten by pretty much everything. We need to solve this problem at the source, and produce less plastic in the first place.

Greenpeace have taken to instagram to challenge people to draw creatures of the oceans.

#DRAWTHEOCEANS

ARE YOU READY FOR THE NEW CHALLENGE?
WHALES

115 likes

greenpeace_oceans #DrawTheOceans has a new theme! We dare you to draw.... a whale! This Sunday is #WorldWhaleDay and what better way to honour them? Unleash your creativity and do some art with whales.

Ideas

What version of a whale will you draw?

Will you draw a cartoon
version or real life?

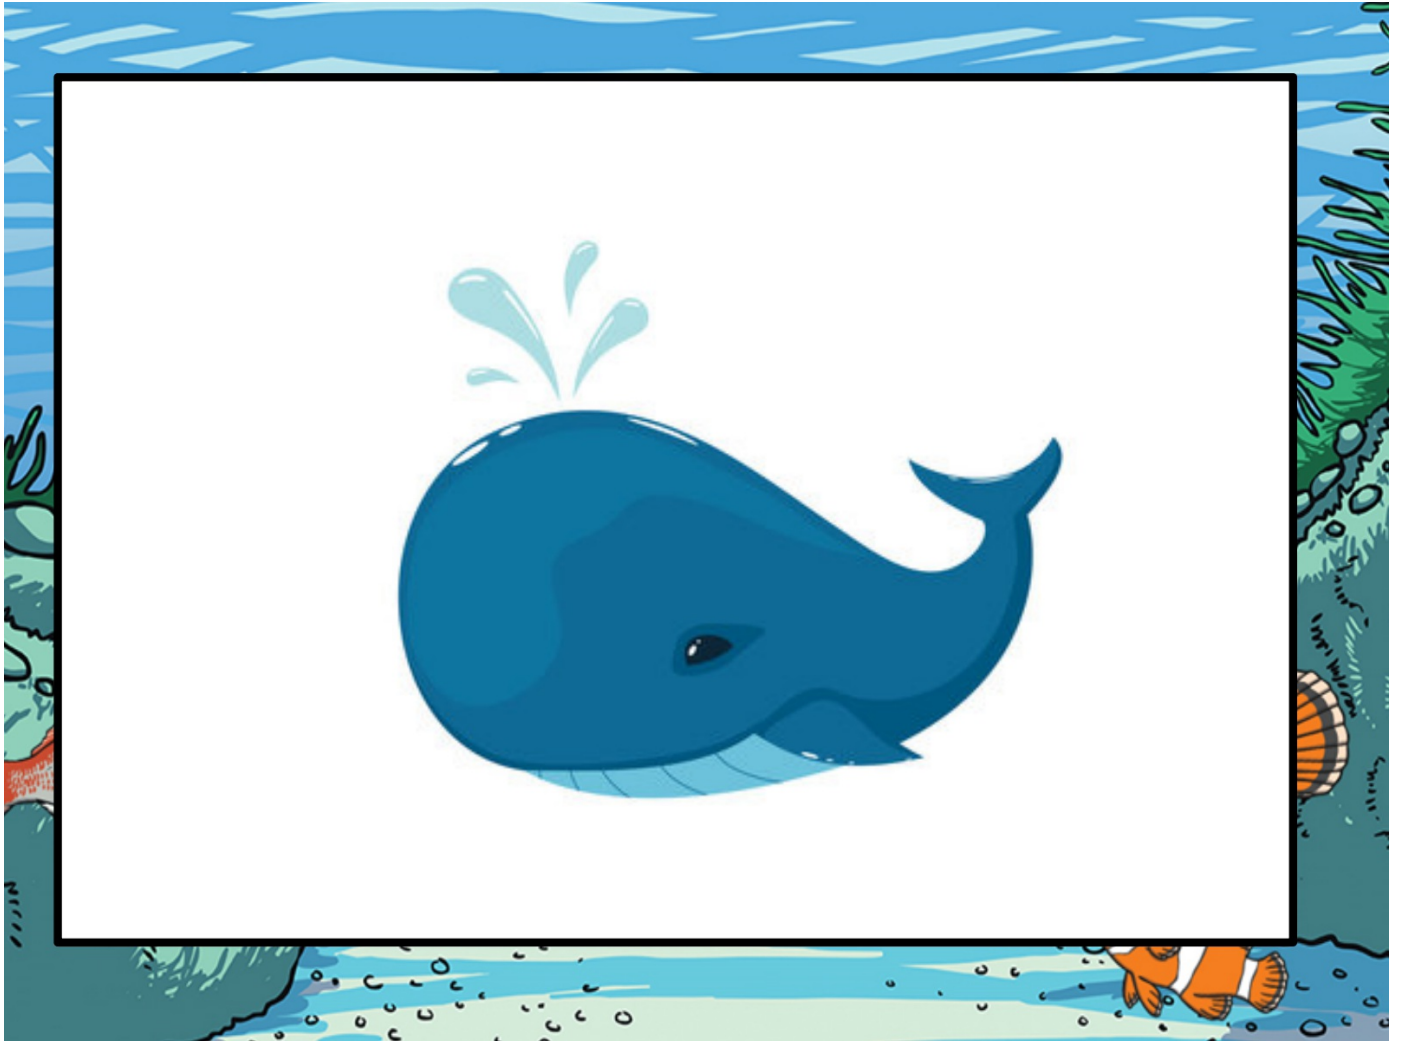

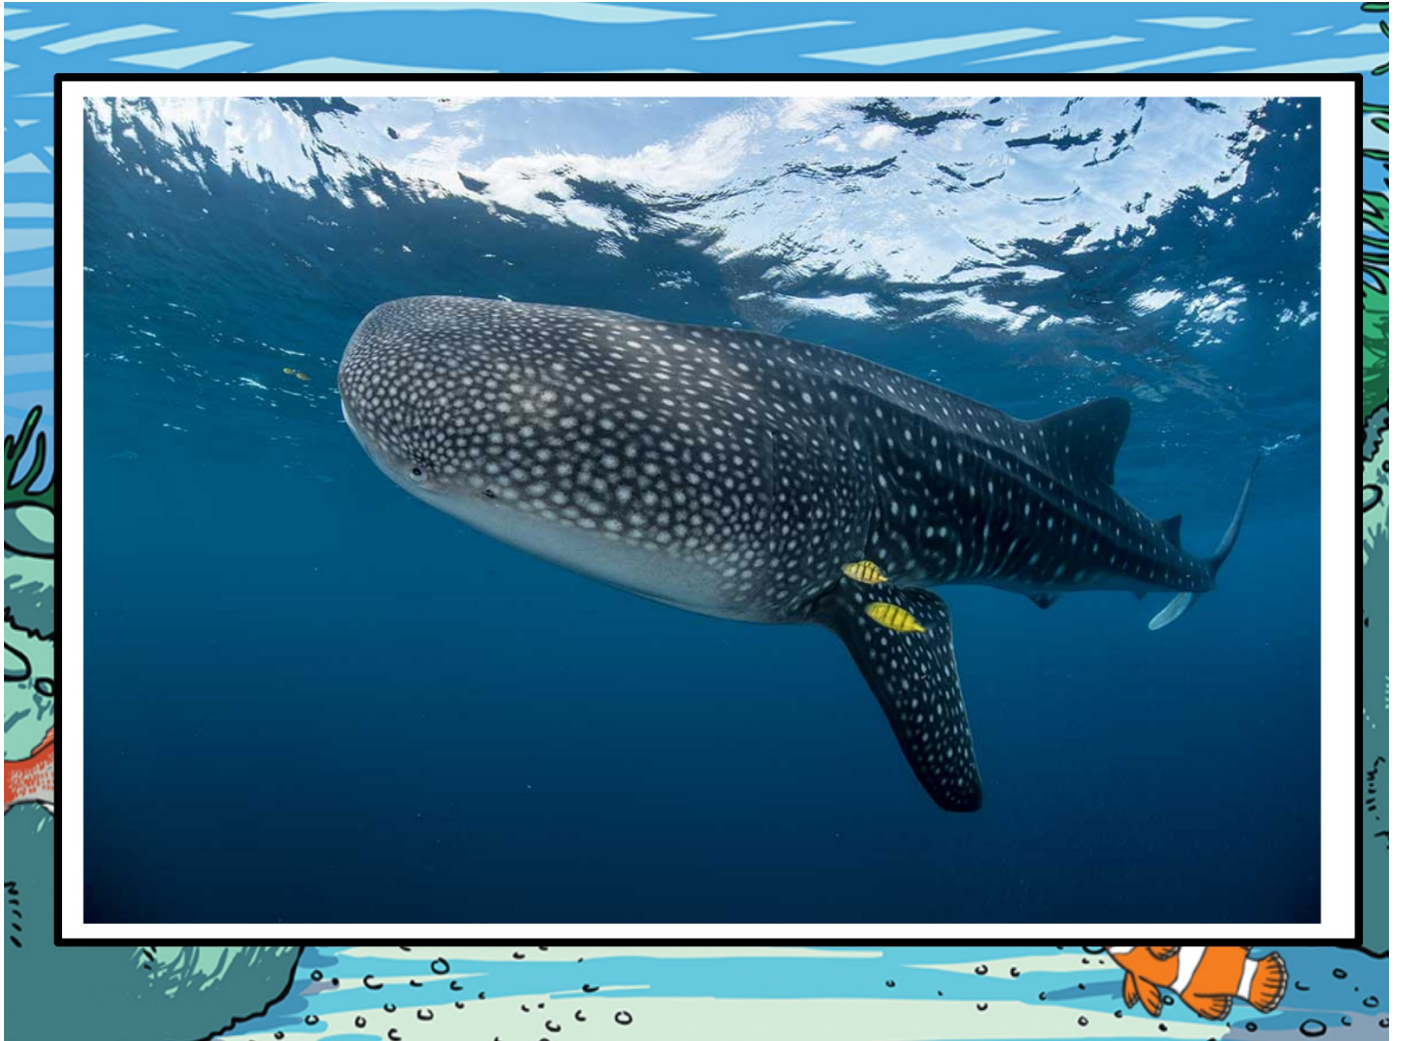

You can do your own research and draw a whale of your choice. Or you can look at the images on here or download the whale sheets for some inspiration for your drawing.

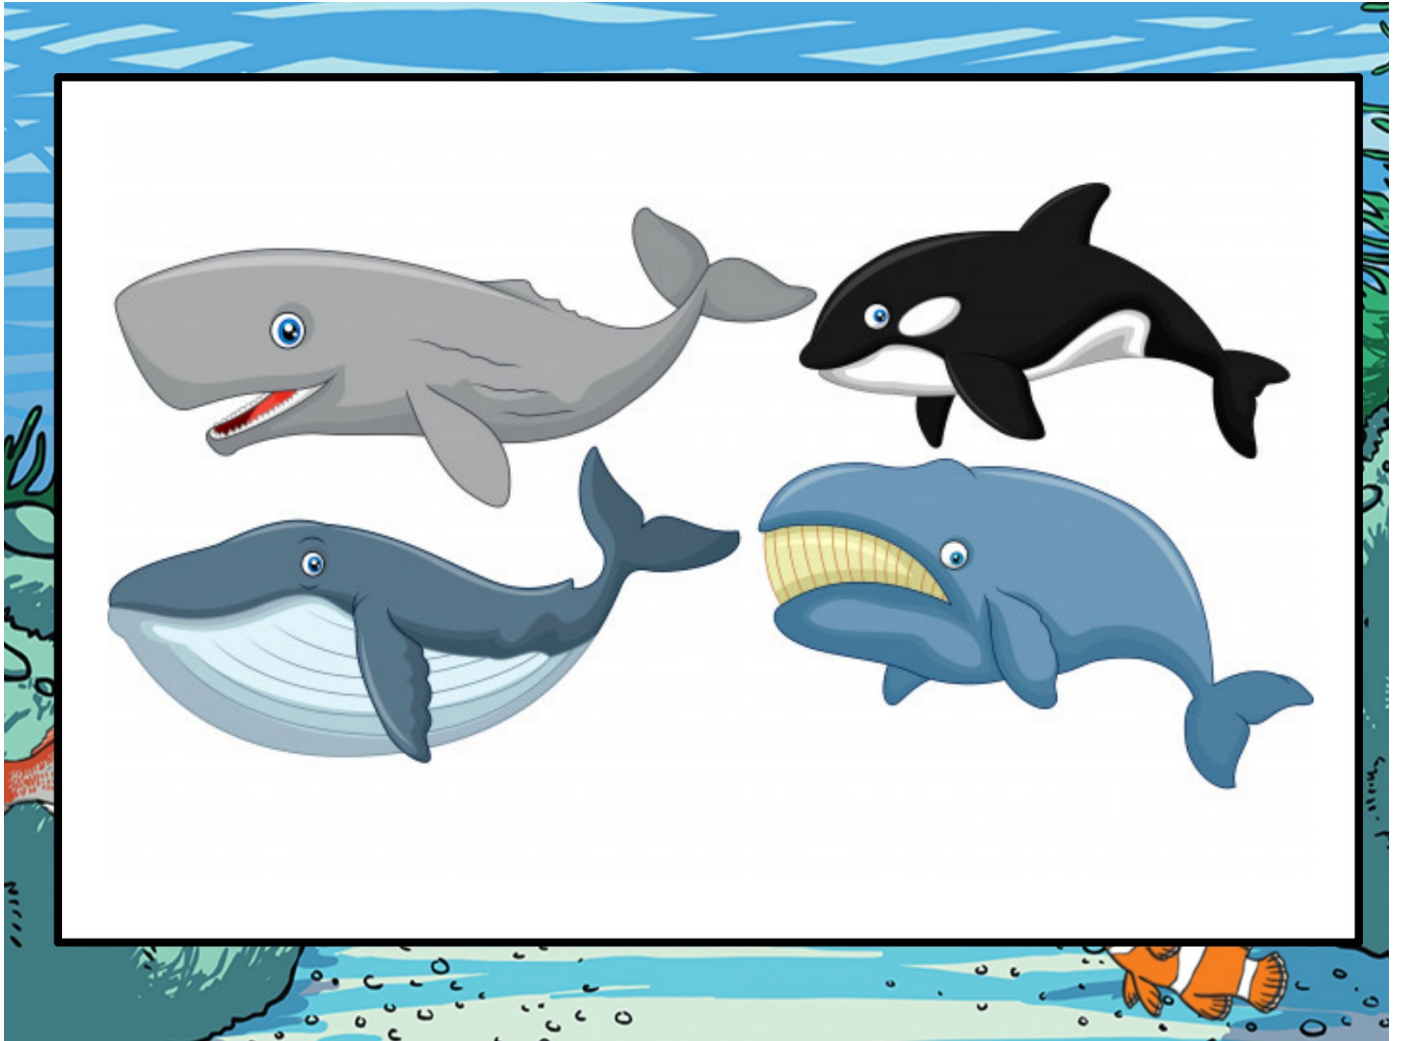

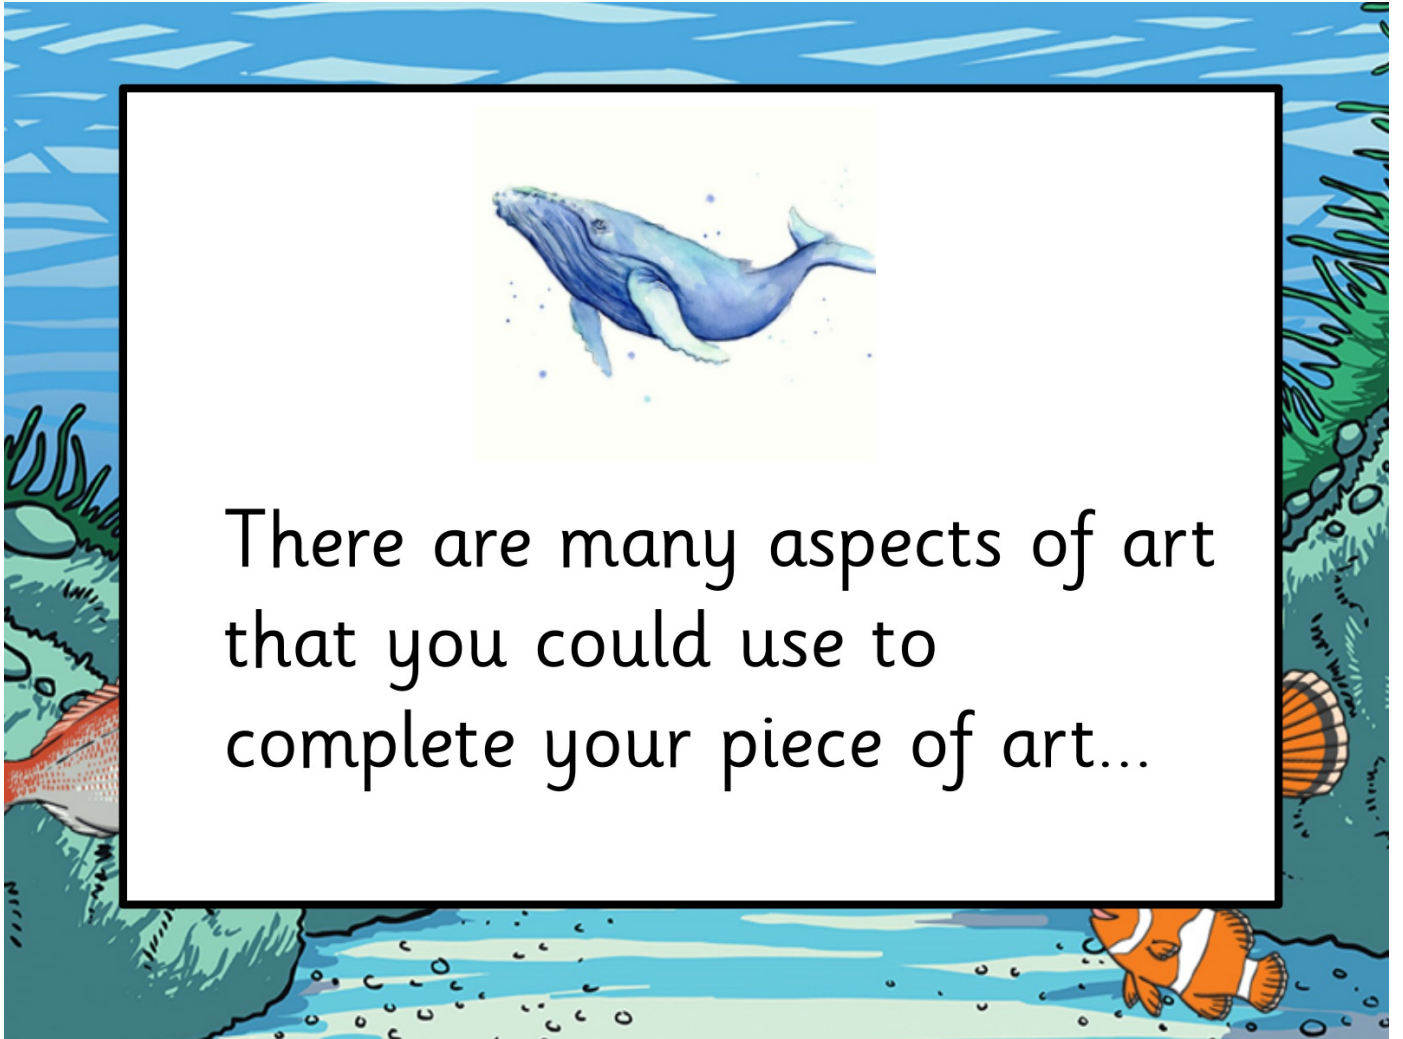

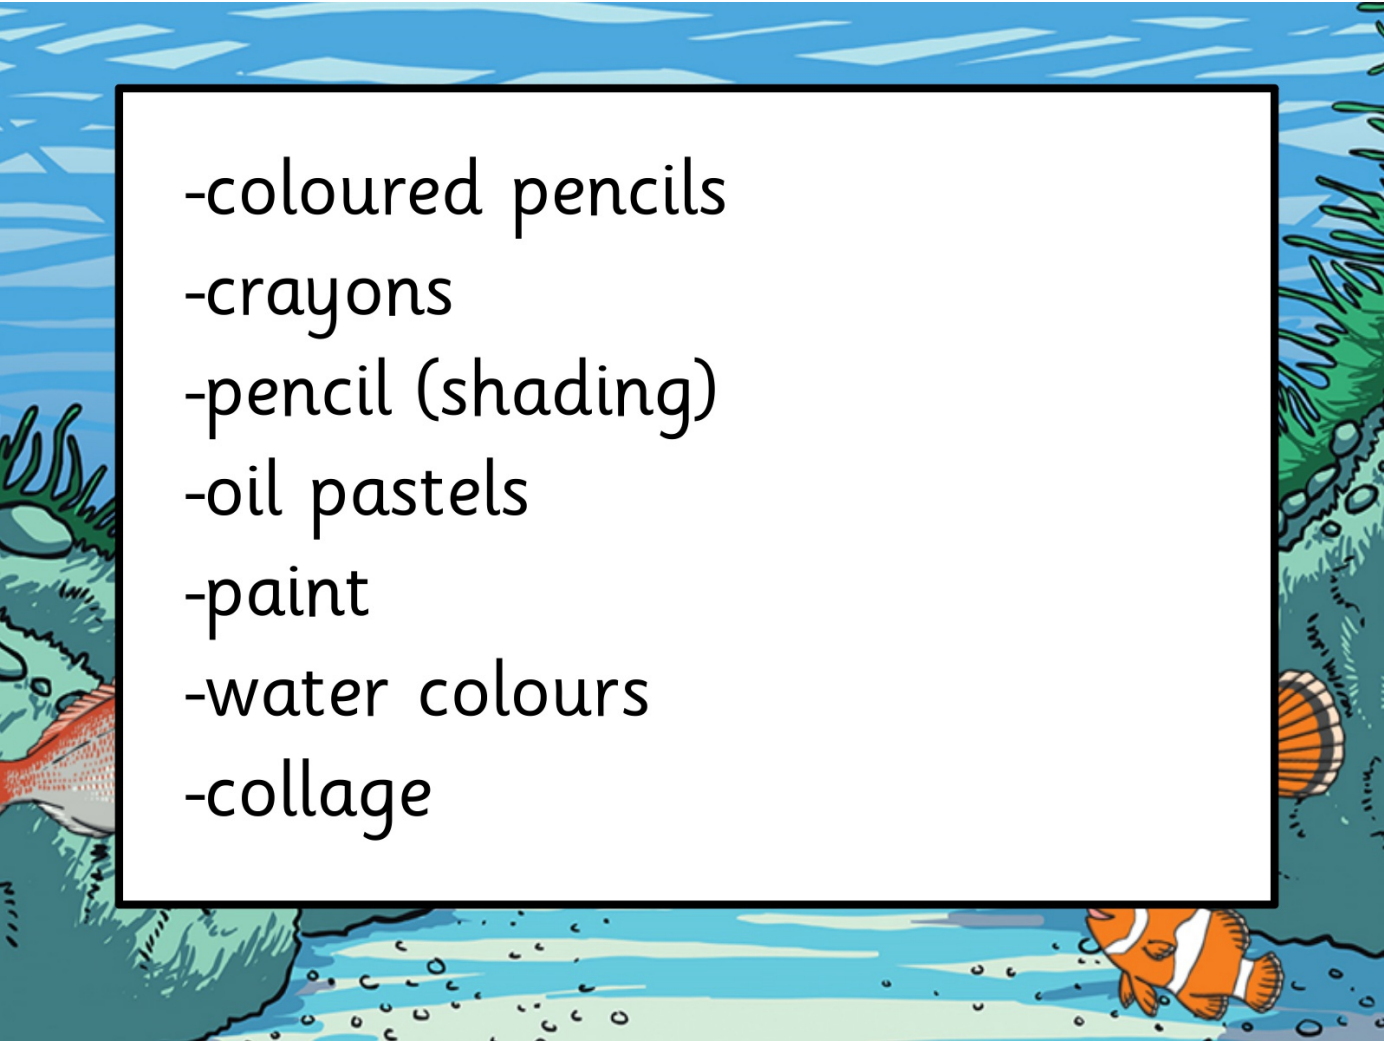

There are many aspects of art that you could use to complete your piece of art...

Once you have sketched your whale you could add detail and colour using...

- An illustration of an underwater scene. The top half shows blue water with light rays filtering down. The bottom half shows a sandy seabed with small bubbles. On the left, there is a piece of coral and a red fish. On the right, there is a clownfish with orange and white stripes, a seashell, and more coral.
- coloured pencils
 - crayons
 - pencil (shading)
 - oil pastels
 - paint
 - water colours
 - collage

What will you use?
